

Milos, Greece

In ancient times, 'Mylos' prospered because of its great mineral wealth. It has been inhabited since the Neolithic age (7000 B.C.) and developed more rapidly than the neighboring islands because of the black glass-like volcanic rock called obsidian which was used by the 'Melians' to make tools and weapons. Since obsidian from Melos has also been located in the Peloponnese, Crete, Cyprus and even in Egypt, it is believed that there was a flourishing export trade too.
